

About Me

Quincey Johnson McClure is the Owner and Director of Little Rock Junior Cotillion and a proud Central Arkansas native with a deep commitment to developing confident, courteous, and capable young people.

Shaped by her years as a competitive swimmer, Quincey gained an early appreciation for discipline, respect, perseverance, and grace under pressure. These foundational values led her naturally into coaching, where she began guiding students not only in athletics but also in the life skills that support personal growth and strong character.

Through her work with students and families, Quincey has cultivated a philosophy that etiquette extends far beyond formalities—it is a reflection of integrity and consideration for others. She places particular emphasis on teaching young people to demonstrate kindness and politeness even in moments of discomfort or uncertainty, recognizing that true confidence is revealed in how one navigates unfamiliar situations.

Quincey is also a strong advocate for the role of social confidence in a young person's development. She believes in the importance of mastering foundational interpersonal skills such as offering a firm handshake, making confident introductions of oneself and others, engaging in thoughtful conversation, and asking meaningful questions. Equally important is the ability to set boundaries with grace through the art of saying "no, thank you," a skill she understands requires both practice and confidence.

In addition, Quincey values the poise and assurance that come from learning the art of social dancing. Instruction in ballroom fundamentals, including timeless dances such as the waltz, provides students with confidence, composure, and ease in a variety of social settings.

Outside of Cotillion, Quincey's happiest days are spent with family, especially during summertime at DeGray Lake, where she proudly serves on the board of Keeping DeGray Lake Beautiful, a nonprofit committed to enhancing the community for all to enjoy. Having grown up on the water, her father often says she learned to waterski before she could walk, even taking her first steps in the boat. She also serves in support of the Arkansas Marlins Swim Club Foundation, reflecting her deep commitment to giving back and strengthening the community she loves. Quincey believes in leading by example through service, generosity, and involvement for the students and families connected to her programs. She shares a special bond with her younger brother, who is ten years younger, a successful business owner, one of her very best friends, and always quick to keep her humble. Quincey married Adam in 2024, and in 2025 they welcomed their first son, ABM, who is teaching them a new understanding of being "on their toes".

As Director of Little Rock Junior Cotillion, Quincey is honored to carry forward a tradition that equips students with essential life skills, social confidence, and enduring manners that will serve them well throughout their lives.
